| Interventions           | Engage the client in "behavioral activation," increasing his activity level and contact with sources of reward, while identifying processes that inhibit activation; or assign "Identify and Schedule Pleasant Activities"; use behavioral techniques such as instruction, rehearsal, role-playing, role reversal, as needed, to facilitate activity in the client's daily life; reinforce success. Assist the client in developing skills that increase the likelihood of deriving pleasure from behavioral activation (e.g., assertiveness skills, developing an exercise plan, less internal/more external focus, increased social involvement); reinforce success. Increase steps to attain personal goals such as improved financial stability and improved interpersonal relationships. Assist client in identifying and replacing thoughts that support depression. Conduct cognitive-behavioral therapy, beginning with helping the client learn the connection between his cognitions/thoughts, depressive feelings, and actions/behaviors. |

| First Goal              | Reduce overall frequency, intensity, and duration of the anxiety so that daily functioning is not impaired.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| Objective 1             | Learn and implement calming and/or relaxation skills to reduce overall anxiety and manage anxiety symptoms.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| Interventions           | Teach the client calming/relaxation skills (e.g., applied relaxation, progressive muscle relaxation, cue controlled relaxation; mindful breathing) and how to discriminate better between relaxation and tension; teach the client how to apply these skills to his daily life. Assign the client homework each session in which he practices relaxation exercises daily, gradually applying them progressively from non-anxiety-provoking to anxiety-provoking situations; review and reinforce success while providing corrective feedback toward improvement.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| Objective 2             | Identify thought patterns and behaviors that contribute to and/or reinforce anxiety symptoms and begin to replace them with those that help to decrease symptoms.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
