

Quotes

He who seeks revenge digs two graves

Find what you love and let it kill you

You're going through hell. Keep going.

Happiness is love, full stop.

The truth will set you free, but not until it's finished with you.

Everything you've ever wanted is on the other side of fear.

Once the game is over, the king and the pawn go back into the same box.

Those who look for the bad in people will surely find it.

It was the best of times, if only someone had told me.

Hells empty and all the devils are here

The best way to find out if you can trust somebody is to trust them

In three words I can sum up everything I've learned about life: it goes on.

Whether you think you can, or you think you can't; you're right.

One day you'll wake up and there won't be anymore time to do the things you've always wanted. Do it now.

If you tell the truth you don't have to remember anything

We accept the love we think we deserve.

We don't see things as they are. We see them as we are.

The truth is everyone is going to hurt you. You've just got to find the ones worth suffering for.

This above all: to thine own self be true.

Expectation is the root of all heartache

He walks among us but he is not one of us.

Shame grows in darkness

Few things eat at marriage like grief, even the best marriages.

If there was no god, it's be worth to invent him.

In the poker game of life, women are the rake.

Love's a cost you pay with your soul

Hate is baggage

What doesn't bend, breaks.

Deserve victory.

Life begins when things go wrong

The least important part of any problem is the answer.

Quotes

Picture Idea Quotes:

Always a bride, never a bridesmaid

Nobody gives ashtrays as gifts anymore

Purr a day anew

After careful deliberation and weighing all the consequences, I decided to be playful.

I'd laugh in your face but I'm saving my voice.

I very clearly asked for a whisper of cinnamon he's very clearly given me a shout.
There are countries in this world where they would lop off his sprinkling hand for something like that

They sell French fries and French doors in the same aisle

Other:

Patient not your paycheck

"Happiness only real when shared" - Engagement somehow someday maybe?

Hate is not the opposite of Love, indifference is. Fraiser from Cheers.

We do not inherit the world from our parents, we borrow it from our Children -
Chief Seattle

Deserve Victory

If you're not willing to sound stupid you don't deserve to be in love

The truth will set you free, but not until it is finished with you.

Everything you've ever wanted is on the other side of fear.

You can always count on Americans to do the right thing - after they've tried everything else. -WC

Stop expecting it to look like what you expect it to look like

You're a man haunted by those two most terrible words; what if.

They worship everything and they value nothing.

Now is the winter of our discontent.

It means buckle your seatbelt Dorothy cause Kansas is going bye bye.

The plumber has been called; the wine is chilled; suddenly my world makes sense again

Do you know the expression Living Well is the best revenge? I know it I just don't know how true it is considering it doesn't show up in a lot of opera plots.

Freud said there are only two things we need to make us happy work and love.

Precisely nowhere

God created men; Samuel Colt made them equal.

You're going through hell. Keep going.

Here is your final lesson. Do not commit the crime for which you now serve the sentence.

Whatever you do, don't be another brick in the wall.

It's one world pal, we're all neighbors.

Hardships often prepare ordinary people for an extraordinary destiny.

Against the assault of laughter, nothing can stand.

Nothing grows in the shadow of an oak

At the core of everyone's personality is the motivation to protect themselves from their worst fear.

There is but one truly serious philosophical problem, and that is suicide.

The line of good and evil cuts through the heart of every human being.

That which you most need will be found where you least want to look.

That which is done out of love always takes place beyond good and evil.

There are 3 types of leaders in this world: the leader that's loved, the leader that's hated, and the leader that people barely know he exists, when the work is done, his aim fulfilled, they will say: we did it ourselves.

Happy families are all alike; every unhappy family is unhappy in its own way.

All losers are romantics. It's what keeps us from blowing our brains out.

One day, in retrospect, the years of struggle will strike you as the most beautiful.

Someone once told me the definition of Hell: The last day you have on earth, the person you became will meet the person you could have become.

Man is that being who invented the gas chambers in Auschwitz; however, he is also that being who entered those chambers upright, with the Lord's Prayer on his lips.

Stupidity naturally comes to its own defense.

You play devils advocate so much that it's gotten to the point where you're just the devil.

I've been experiencing a hyper acute version of this lately. I don't mind people being stupid, but when people are teaching their stupidity to others, I will often intercede a point I consider additive to the discussion because it corrects an ignorance instead of spreading it. For instance, I had someone try to argue that medicine is barely understood anyway (in a handwavy way) and mentions "doctors still don't know how aspirin even works." was rational he was using to make a point whether or not someone else should get surgery. So I interject, yes we do understand aspirin and we understand the procedure for the surgery being discussed very well as well. Personally, something like this would put my mind at ease.

Unfortunately what happened is that other people suddenly came to the defense of the original statement, and collectively they decided I was incorrect and proceeded to lecture me to try and convince me of that.

It's a very weird phenomenon, it's like stupidity/ignorance naturally comes to its own defense.

Personally I want to know how things actually work, but apparently this is uncommon and discouraged largely (systemically I may suggest), as some sort of ageism boys club, where "wisdom" is of much greater value than curiosity. And in this sense I mean "wisdom" as something that someone is told as a fact, and accepts it without question. This leads to them assuming based on their incorrect information and breeds the spread of misinformation.

Critical thinkers are unsure of reality, thus unsure of themselves, while those of lower intelligence are absolutely sure about something based on no knowledge they took the time to properly acquire themselves.

It really pisses me off that from the very top down, critical thinking is immediately reacted to defensively.

Edit: I wanted to add that it's an enormous hypocrisy also, because when you are young, you are encouraged to ask questions. Thing is, if your question is too difficult or does not align with the way things are currently, suddenly your question is a bad or stupid question.

To me, spreading misinformation, or protecting it, is a problem precisely because it will end with someone suffering for it. Let's say an earlier example, someone may have been talked out of a potentially life saving surgery. Say that happens and they die. To me, the ignorance and boldness of that assertion that may have contributed to a decline in someone else's life, whether willfully or unknowingly, caused by the other person's statement and reinforced by the group that jumped all over me for trying to correct him is a contributing factor in his death. To me that's criminal negligence, on society's part.

In a societal sense, we have ideas and we have beliefs. Ideas often challenge and sometimes can change beliefs, but, alternatively, ideas can also be killed to protect the beliefs. To kill an idea, you must kill the person, anyone who it has been communicated to, and erase all other historical records of it. In this philosophical sense, ideas become inconsequential. Ideas become wisdom by defeating it, and wisdom avoids ideas the same way. The argument itself ultimately doesn't matter. What's "right" is decided by which idea survives. In some sense, the only real sociological question then becomes: can my violence conquer your violence?

Steven Hawking expresses his exhaustion with belief almost always completely rejects anything that does not agree with it, and then struggles as hard as it can to maintain that.

Does this mean our greatest fear is that we are wrong?

Pete Carroll came to chew gum and kick ass and he's not out of gum yet.

There is no right and wrong, just winners and losers.